What Do Union Members Say About the Teamsters and NNU?

The reviews are in, and they're not good

REALTIES OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Unions make promises, but there are no guarantees in collective bargaining

What you potentially gain, lose, or keep depends on the results of negotiations

Zero-Star Reviews for the Teamsters

Hear what Corewell East nurses have to say about the Teamsters

"I don't know any nurse who thinks (the contract) is a good deal."

Deadline Detroit

"the inaugural agreement the Teamsters negotiated for 10,000 registered nurses… revealed the union is ultimately a pussycat."

"One wonders if [Peter] Finn [Director of the Teamsters Public Services and Health Care Division] took the time to read the fine print on the Corewell East contract his union negotiated. There is indeed a "safe staffing" reference, but the provision is toothless."

And the NNU is no better...

Registered nurses at George Washington University Hospital in Washington D.C. are trying to vote to remove the District of Columbia Nurses Association (DNCA) — an NNU affiliate organization.

"Two years ago, DCNA union officials made all kinds of promises to my coworkers and me. They have not only failed to deliver on them but have driven a wedge between a lot of my coworkers," Ms. Abraha said in a statement. "We want to exercise our right to vote this union out, and both DCNA union officials and GWU Hospital management should respect our free choice."

With reviews like these, is either union worth the risk?
